

Harriet Territt

Partner
Jones Day

Harriet Territt has more than 20 years' experience in advising the world's largest banks and multinational companies on complex disputes, compliance, and regulatory issues, with a particular focus on the cutting edge of financial technology. Her practice covers all forms of financial instruments, with significant experience in disputes involving derivatives and structured products. Increasingly, Harriet works with clients on liability, risk, and governance issues arising out of the fintech revolution, with a particular focus on blockchain, crypto assets, digital currencies, alternative finance arrangements, and consumer facing products. She was a founding member of Jones Day's Fintech Initiative and now co-leads the group.

Harriet also has substantial experience navigating the conflicting obligations that can apply to international organisations under worldwide trade, sanctions and money laundering rules. She advises on regulatory investigations and disputes arising out of global supply chains, regularly advises on the UK Modern Slavery Act and has a particular interest in using new technologies such as blockchain and AI to manage trade flows.

Harriet is co-chair of the Jones Day global Women's Group and is passionate about helping to develop the next generation of female business leaders.
